

Battle of Antietam Essay

Intro
and

In 1861 when the Confederates fired at Fort Sumter, the civil war had officially started. Upon the start of war, one of the battles the Union fought was Battle of Antietam. The Battle of Antietam was significant in a sense that it gave an advantage to the Confederates, but was ultimately not the most significant turning point in the US Civil War. The most important turning point was at the Battle of Gettysburg, followed by the Battle of Vicksburg.

Thesis

Great
Topic
Sentence
Why Antietam
important

The Battle of Antietam was significant as it gave an upper hand to the Confederates, but was also an important battle as Lincoln finally found a good military general. Initially, Lincoln appointed General McClellan to guide the troops into battle. However, McClellan was not a very good general as he was very indecisive and lacked the courage to put up a good fight with the Confederates. For instance, near the end of the Battle of Antietam, McClellan had an open opportunity to finish the Confederate army and ultimately end civil war, but because he was so indecisive, he ended up not doing anything. Hence, this made them lose the battle and thus gave the Confederates an advantage as the specific details +

evidence
on Antietam

ANALYSIS
Why
antietam
significant

war continued on. However, it was also significant for the North as Lincoln fired McClellan and finally found a great general: Ulysses S. Grant. U.S. Grant later led his army into victory at the Battle of Vicksburg and was also a key figure

In the victory for the Union during the Civil War.

Topic Sentence The Battle of Antietam was not the most significant
Why
Gettysburg battle as the Battle of Gettysburg and Vicksburg were more significant the most important ones. The Battle of Gettysburg was the most significant turning point in the Civil War as the South and North faced each other with detailed evidence of around 70,000 soldiers on each side. After the first Gettysburg couple of days, both sides lost over 20,000 men and it was one of the most devastating battles for both sides. However, on the last day, Robert E. Lee from the Confederates ordered his entire troop to march towards the Union army, and they lost terribly.
The Confederates suffered horribly as their entire army
ANALYSIS
why
Gettysburg North was destroyed by the North. Hence, this gave the
more
significant significant turning points of the Civil War.

Besides the Battle of Gettysburg as the most important turning point, the Battle of Vicksburg was also perhaps more important than the Battle of Antietam as the North finally had control over the Mississippi River.
The Mississippi River was controlled by the Confederates
in the beginning and it gave them the transportation advantage. But, at the Battle of Vicksburg, General U.S. Grant led his troops and captured the two outposts that guarded the Mississippi River. This was a huge opportunity for the North as they now have the river to transport resources.

Topic Sentence
Why
Vicksburg
more
significant

Detailed
Evidence

Analysis
why
significant

CONCLUSION
with
Strong
Analysis

Which is most
significant
+
why

In retrospect, the Battle of Antietam was in fact not the most significant turning point of the Civil War as it gave the Confederates an advantage while also giving North finally a good general. So, the most important turning point was actually the Battle of Gettysburg, then followed by the Battle of Vicksburg. The Battle of Gettysburg was costly for both sides, but ultimately the North destroyed Robert E. Lee's army at the end, which ultimately gave so much advantage to the North to a point where winning the war was easy for the Union. Later, the Battle of Vicksburg gave North the victory and also gave them the Mississippi River for transporting resources. Hence, the Battle at Gettysburg, followed by Vicksburg, was the most significant turning point in the U.S. Civil War.